Grant,

I hope all is well. I just read your article and wanted to mention that I believe the quote below was misattributed to the AEA President when in fact this is what I said. I can't imagine Bruce saying that it's better than the status quo (unless he happened to say this off-line).

Here's the quote from the story: Even so, he called the preemptive action "the lesser of the evils" compared to state-mandated plans that can include school closures, conversion to charter schools, relaxed state rules or the status quo. "Of the four options, it's a better one," he said.

Anyway, I think the misunderstanding may be because when I discussed this in the meeting I said…. that I believed from the union vantage point it would seem the preemptive action would be the lesser of the evils. In addition, I said that our early action helped maintain local control by the district which could be lost with state board action should we maintain the status quo. Anyway, given that this seemed to be an inaccuracy and fails to share my expressed position publically I wanted to share my concern. Thanks.
